“ No words can describe the deep sadness I feel within my heart and soul to have lost such a loving and wonderful man. We always said we'd get together to catch up; but time and committments kept that reunion at bay. I can't even begin to find the words to convey the sadness and dissappointment I feel within me to have let life take over and never making that reunion happen. I remember the day we met at the Little League baseball games, going out dancing with your sis, and the conversations we had about life in general. But, what I miss the most is watching you play your guitar and sometimes singing along with you. The way your eyes lit up when you smiled and how much love and devotion you had for your children. Earth has lost a beautiful person; but Heaven has gained an angel. I find comfort in knowing that you have finally met my darling Niki and that you and she are smiling down at me because you know how much I love you both.

“ Rick was my best friend in high school. I always looked up to and admired him. Rick was a person who always managed to get the job done, whatever the job was and whatever obstacles were in his way. He was Hercules. I am a better person for having known Rick and the world is diminished by his passing.

You were taken way tooo young. I will miss you greatly, yet so glad I had the chance to even know you at all. You taught me alot about accounting, life and acceptance. However some things are just so hard to understand or accept. I am upset about not getting to go out on the boat with you this summer as we had planned and not getting to do any more lunches together. I will always remember you and never forget how we met and became freinds. Rest in peace brother until we see each other again!
